State Board of Review Approves 7 Nominations

The State Board of Review for the National Register of Historic Places met Friday, November 18, 2016 and approved the following nominations:

- St. Luke's Parish Zion Chapel Of Ease Cemetery, Hilton Head Island, Beaufort County
- Charleston Consolidated Railway, Electric, and Gas Company Car House (Trolley Barn), Charleston, Charleston County
- General Asbestos and Rubber Company Main Mill (GARCO), North Charleston, Charleston County
- Old Pilgrim Baptist Church Cemetery and Kilgore Cemetery, Simpsonville vicinity, Greenville County
- Columbia Commercial Historic District (Additional Documentation), Richland County
- Columbia Commercial Historic District (Boundary Increase), Richland County
- Olympia Union Hall, Columbia, Richland County

These nominations will be forwarded to the Keeper of the National Register at the National Park Service in Washington, DC who makes the final decision about listing the property in the National Register. For more information about the State Board of Review, see <http://shpo.sc.gov/programs/natreg/Pages/Board.aspx> or contact Ehren

5 New Listings in the National Register of Historic Places

The James Phinney House in Chester County was listed in the National Register October 11, 2016. The James Phinney House was built in 1856 and is a fine example of a late antebellum Greek Revival raised cottage. The house has a low-pitch side-gabled roof and prominent central entry portico featuring a pediment supported by four square wooden pillars. The Phinney House was once at the center of a substantial upstate cotton plantation and the 1860 U.S. Federal Census Slave Schedule lists James Phinney as owning thirty-three enslaved people, making him a very prominent slaveholder within the context of Chester District.

The Oconee County Courthouse, at 211 W. Main Street in Walhalla, was also listed in the National Register October 11, 2016. Constructed in 1956, the Oconee County Courthouse is an interesting and eclectic mix of periods within the Modern movement: steel enamel paneling, heavy limestone cornices and sills, and large glass paneling add characteristically midcentury ornament to a body otherwise reminiscent of the Stripped Classicism that is typically seen in buildings built several decades earlier. This mixing of styles makes the Oconee County Courthouse stand out among South Carolina's civic structures, and within the portfolio of its designers, the regionally significant architectural firm Lyles, Bissett, Carlisle & Wolff.

Pine Street School, at 500 South Pine Street in Spartanburg, was listed in the National Register October 17, 2016. The school building represents three major building campaigns: the original, two-story, roughly L-shaped, Beaux-Arts building with facades on Boyd and Pine streets constructed in 1928-29; a one-story classroom wing extending east from the historic northern elevation constructed in 1956; and a large two-story addition extending to the east of the historic Pine Street façade, with a one-story extension to the rear of this elevation constructed between 1999 and 2001. The school is significant in the areas of education and architecture. The original design was influenced by the new South Carolina school building code of 1924, which was written following a fire at the Cleveland School in Kershaw in 1923 that killed seventy-seven people. Charles Coker Wilson, who was the architect for the Pine Street School, was also the principal author of the 1923 building code and deployed his ideas in the design of the school.

American Spinning Company Mill No. 2, located at 300 Hammett Street in Greenville, was listed in the National Register October 18, 2016. It is an early twentieth century textile mill that was constructed just outside the city of Greenville in 1902. The current Mill complex occupies approximately thirteen acres and is located among the remnants of several old mill communities now known as San Souci and the Poe Mill neighborhoods. The mill property includes two contributing buildings: the main mill building and the cotton warehouses (with subsequent additions); and two contributing structures: the water tower and the reservoir. The mill complex is significant for its association with the textile industry, which played a vital role in the development of the South Carolina upstate during much of the twentieth century. It is also significant architecturally, for its association with the prolific engineering and design firm Lockwood & Greene, who designed textile mills from New England to the Carolinas, as well as Greenville residents Joseph E. Sirrine and Capt. Jacob Cagle, both of whom were associated with the design and construction of the plant.

Melrose Heights-Oak Lawn-Fairview Historic District in Columbia was listed in the National Register November 2, 2016. The district a collection of 607 contributing buildings, including historic outbuildings, and 185 non-contributing buildings, including non-contributing outbuildings, and 24 non-contributing structures located a mile and a half east of Columbia's original city limits. The neighborhoods of Melrose Heights and Oak Lawn emerged in the early 20th century, beginning with the efforts of the Powell family to subdivide and develop the land. Buildings in the district represent many distinct architectural styles and forms from the early- to mid-twentieth century. These styles and forms include Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, Spanish Colonial Revival, Prairie School, Bungalow/Craftsman, Airplane Style Bungalow, Ranch, Bungalow, Minimal Traditional, Kit Homes, and American Foursquare. The district is significant in the areas of community planning/development, architecture, and landscape architecture.

Images of these new listings are available on the agency's Facebook page <https://www.facebook.com/scdah/>, and will soon be added to the SC Historic Properties Record <http://schpr.sc.gov/>.
